ATTACKS BY THE AUTHORITIES.

Attempted Suppression of Betting.

LONDON, May 16, 1874. For some years past there has been reason to fear that the old fashioned and formerly highly suc-The public interest in them appeared to be falling of, the different "events" were obtaining much smaller entries, the attendance did not rise to the old dimensions, and the field, that went to the post-particularly in the case of the Chester Cupmy no means either in point of quantity or quality came up to those of the past. In some of these respects, however, there has been a great revival this year, and more especially with regard to the Cup. The crowd that witnessed the struggle for it this week was one of the largest that ever assembied on the Rhoodee. This was, too, in face of the fact that the races receive no encouragement from many of the local authorities. Indeed by most of them it is regarded with an evil eye. The DEAN AND CHAPTER of the cathedral, including that muscular Christian, Canon Kingsley, would do much to see them suppressed, and they find a ready tool in the chief astable of the city, who is doing all be can to harass those connected with them. During the past week he has extingoushed the outside betting en, that is to say, those who do not come into the grand stand enclosure; he has stopped all betting whatever within the walls of the city. wherever carried on, and he went to the length of applying to the magistrates for warrants to arrest ersons engaged in betting, even if they were doing so within the sacred precincts of Tattersall's ring. The magistrates saw, however, that this was going too lar, and they refused to grant the beenses, though they give their countenance otherwise to the constable, who, no doubt, has instituted some reforms, but is troubled with tro de zele. The Rhoodee is a huge amphitheatre, of an tregularly square form, with the corners rounded of except on one side, occupied by a rallway embankment. It is surrounded by high banks, from which an excellent view can be obtained; but the course itself is perfectly flat. The numerous and rather snarp turns make it dangerous for horses; so much so that many jockeys have a strong objection to ride on it, and one, Fordham, will not do so on any consideration. For the Cup the track is twice round and a distance—that is to say, two at the last was found in The Preacher, a good handicap horse, who, however, had recently broken a blood vessel, and was quite likely to do so again. The Colonel is distinguished for speed more than stamina, but it was thought by his friends that the former quality would enable him to cut down his opponents at the finish. Mont Valerien was only a moderate horse last year, but he emjoyed a great private reputation, and was for a long period first lavorite. Eertram was the highest class horse among the lot, but his stamina was doubtful. Lydon recently won the Newmarket Handicap, which, however, is a short distance race. Implorer was immensely fancted by his party on the strength of a private trial, but his own "form" was moderate. Organist was known to be a good stayer, and collateral running proved him to have a great chance, though he was not heavily backed by the public. Redworth is a most uncertain horse, and suleman is noted for his speen at short dashes. The others were only interior handicap horses.

Against Jealousy, taken; 50 to 1 against Buildinch, Taken.

Having "cutting down" orders, first Daldam and snortly alterwards Cingulina went to the front, the latter making the pace tremendously "hot." She kept at the head of the field right round the whole track once, and a portion of it the second time—that is, for about a mile and a half—when she suddenly dropped away, having broken down. Leolinus (the stable companion of feedworth), who nad always been lying near the bead of the field, for the most part second, was then left with the lead. At the Grosvenor Eridge furn, however, Cambuslang and Mont Valerien ran up to him and challenged him, but before they had reached the commencement of the straight run for home they were completely "pusped out." Leolinus, the despised outsider, for a moment appeared to have the race at his mekey, but as they entered the straight, Organist, who had hitherto been lying quietly in the middle division, next the rails, suddenly dashed up to his quarters, the hearest of the others being Campuslang, Mont Valerien and Bertram. For a moment the issue was in doubt, but as they approached the grand enclosure Glover called upon Organist, who, answering gamely, passed his apponent at the distance and won cleverly by two lengths from Leolinus, the latter being the same distance in front of Bertram, who was study eased when his jockey saw that he could not win. Mont Valerien, who was sadiy put out by the awkward turns, which he rounded only with difficulty, was fourth, and Cambuslang, who ran a much better horse than was expected to his stable companion Leolinus, and after him Lydon, who ran well for two miles but could get no further. Saleiman, who was eighten, was never really dangerous, and among the others it is sufficient to remark of The Colonei that when he was expected to show his fine turn of speed he was thoroughly exhausted, and of The Preacher that when going remarkably well he again broke a blood vessel, as many had anneonated. Going out of the straight Mont Valerien took the command, but with sight other change they ran thus along the railway side and the Dee side, where Albanus drew up to the leader and Andred took closer order, and at the Grosvenor Bridge turn Bertram ran into the fourth place. Before they had reached the straight Mont Valerien was beaten, and shortly atterwards Albanus had to give way to Andred. Cambusiang rapidly made up his leeway from the turn and struggled gamely to reach Andred from the distance, but was not able to do so, and Lord Falmonta's horse won in a canter by three lengths; the Tester being third, two lengths beamd the second; Albanus a bad fourth, Bertram fifth, Syriam sixth, Spectator seventh, Quall eighth, Dalham minth and Mont Valerien next.
